Thank you to everyone who came to our performances at NYU Skirball. This run of The Duet Project: Distance Is Malleable featured my duets with collaborators DonChristian Jones, Ishmael Houston-Jones, Iris McCloughan, Margaret Leng Tan, and my late mother, among others.

Performing in such a big theater was challenging, but the pandemic has made us appreciate being in a theater with fresh perspectives. Our team is deeply thankful to NYU Skirball, executive director Jay Wegman for trusting us, and all staff and crew who helped to make it happen. Thank you to lighting designer David Ferri, stage manager Jessica Ho, and rehearsal assistant Allison Hsu. Our team appreciates those who offered us their personal reflections!

Gia Kourlas ends her review for The New York Times: "It's messy and harsh, defiant, and awkward—like life."

New to this iteration of The Duet Project: Distance Is Malleable was Margaret Leng Tan, who hurried back from her European tour to join us at NYU Skirball.
